

Human Life Sciences
O|2 building VU Campus

The Human Life Sciences building at the VU Campus in Amsterdam is one of the first academic buildings in the Netherlands that was developed for a specific research theme: Human Life Sciences. As of January 2016, the building will house researchers from VU University (VU), the University of Amsterdam (UvA), and the VU University Medical Centre (VUmc), conducting fundamental and applied scientific and medical research.

The building will give researchers access to state-of-the-art research infrastructure and will also allow partners to rent office and laboratory space. This will contribute to the efficient use of high-end research facilities and promote knowledge-sharing and collaboration within the common theme of Human Life Sciences.

The department of Anatomy and Neurosciences will move to the O|2 building on January 11th 2016.
